Of a Life Guard's Duty? DAYASHARDING BY MAIL PLANE

No. 7-JOYCE LEVVY.

"Darling! You saved my life! How can I ever repay you?"

A life guard at the Tidal Basin saves many lives every summer, but it isn't often that he is addressed in that fashion. The sad part of it is that those words weren't spoken to Joyce Levvy became frightened and started to drown. Her male ompanion, who remained in shallow water, added his cries to hers.

Joyce dived and brought her back. She flung her arms about er companion's neck and hysterically cried out the above. The guard went back to his position unthanked.
This is Joyce Levry's second season at the Tidal Basin; he is years old and comes from Birmingham, Alabama. Last winter cot four letters from Howard College in that State. By way showing the Washington boys how good the athletes grow in South, he took on Hugh Johnston one day for a sprint and Johnston is another guard and captain of Central water swimming. He won the District championship here year and then went home and won a Southeastern champion-

He's got a flock of medals, c says that Washington swimmers are better than those of Birmingham, and he ought to know, for he was a life guard down there four years before he came up here last summer.

And yet there are women who come up to his stand, look at the words "Life Guard" on his jersey and ask:

"("an your sains?"

Husband Jailed For Family Fight Over Apple Pie

Pecvishness, caused by a slight difference in the size of two apple pies, one which his wife had made for herself and the other for him, was responsible yesterday for Bennie Coverson eing sent to jail for six months by Judge Aukam in Police Court. Coverson came home with a grouch and his wife, Bessie, tried to console him with a pic. Seeing another pie on the shelf a triffe larger than his he inquired the reason therefor, and when told by his wife that she intended eating that ong, he flew into a rage and struck her in the jaw, cutting her tongue and "It was just an ordinary married slap," explained Coverson. "I usually slap my wife and then walk awa) -but this time I must have hit her harder than usual." "If you hit her like that again." warned Judge Aukam. "I will see that you get a year in jail."
